If appropriate, the private placement may be complemented by a short official public placement immediately before settlement. During the subsequent subscription period, which usually lasts for two weeks, the company will present itself accompanied by the banking syndicate at various finance venues to give interested investors an opportunity to collect information regarding the securities and the company. Given the high evaluations of listed peer companies, many sponsors prepare a short public placement immediately before settlement. Even though the appropriate corporate governance needs only to be implemented shortly before the launch of the IPO, preparation time should not be underestimated. Regarding the decision to delay the disclosure, the company is required to comprehensively record such decision, including information about who was responsible for the decision and how the conditions of delaying the disclosure were satisfied.
