As fruit trees mature, they must undergo two pruning phases. You may also need to thin spurs. Perform a bench cut. Trim any side growths down to no longer than two buds. Yes, those shoots will just compete with the main trunk which you don't want. If it is still in the growth stages you may not want to take too much off the height.

One of the simplest instructions given in nearly every article or book chapter: shoots should be shortened by two thirds of their length to an upward or outward facing bud.
