This review and other reviews of mine can be found on Book Nest! There is no moment in this book when I do not despise the protagonist.

Quentin is just itching to do something heroic, and if that involves refitting a ship, he does it. He found a quaint little shop, he befriended the local lord, the village folk loved him, he found a sharp young apprentice to help out, and, best yet, he met a comely young widow with the prettiest eyes. The diction was clear and there was the right level of emotion. Three because many of the secondary characters fell a bit flat to me, and several threads dropped off without being regathered.

Julia lost her humanity from a rape. Weak and disorientated, he lands in New York. She is planning on writing another one of these fucking tragedies. The Australian accent isn't as bad as people say, I think people like being dramatic in their reviews a little too .
