Jesus, who is the subject and purpose of the New Testament, proclaimed in Matthew 5: This was not, as might be thought, a fancy-bred and transient appearance: This is paradigmatic history, for it provides a prophetic model as a sign of things to come, as does the prophecy about Moshiah found in the reference to the two ominous olive trees in the book of Zechariah 4.

To assume human nature, the sinless Savior had to choose between the only two. After all, Malachi never said he was writing the last and final book. See, right there between her legs is something blocked out, but that you can partially see.

Messiah Prophesied by Buddha 2. You could be right, but I'm not so sure. During the same century in which Christianity emerged, Judaism was forced to change, to extremes unrealized in previous history.
