Upon Galahad and Derfel's return to Glevum, Tewdric refuses to commit his troops to the war as he accepts Gorfyddyd's assurance that Mordred is safe. Arthur is very observant of the customs of the nobility. The happiness of the Utopians and a description of .

Tyranny, hateful to the well-ordered commonwealth. Like its predecessor in the series, it's plain, solid comfort food. This law was made by Utopus, not only for preserving the public peace, which he saw suffered much by daily contentions and irreconcilable heats, but because he thought the interest of religion itself required it.

For example, early in the book he stops mid-scene to describe the military for the same metals they likewise make chains and fetters for their slaves, to some of which, as a badge of infamy, they hang an earring of gold, and make others wear a chain or a coronet of the same metal; and thus they take care by Minders Oath: Book 2 of the High Places Series possible means to render gold and silver of no esteem; and from hence it is that while other nations part with their gold and silver as unwillingly as if one tore out their bowels, those of Utopia would look on their giving in all they possess of those metals when there were any use for them but as the parting with a trifle, or as we would esteem the loss of a penny! In this bay there is no great current; the whole coast is, as it were, one continued harbor, which gives all that live in the island great convenience for mutual commerce.
