Then you will enjoy science; that pleasure will be a pleasure for all. But then, if you are really thinking about humanity, if you look to the good of mankind in your studies, a formidable question arises before you; for, however little you may have of the critical spirit, you must at once note that in our society of today science is only an appendage to luxury, which serves to render life pleasanter for the few, but remains absolutely inaccessible to the An Appeal to the Youth of mankind.

Must you drag on the same weary existence as your father and mother for thirty years? You stop me at last! It is now no longer a question of accumulating scientific truths and discoveries.

Both one and the other have the same selfish end in view, personal gratification. Caressing the pretty head of that child who nestles close to you, do you never think about the lot that awaits him, if the present social conditions are not changed? Gothard tunnel dies of ankylosis, not – withstanding diamond drills; that the mason and the day-laborer are out of work, just as before, at the foot of the Giffard lifts.
