Engaging Conflict, Confronting Crisis When we have the courage to face conflict, take on problems, learn from crisis, and work on our weaknesses, we grow. Many conflict resolution organizations would have a hard time surviving were it not for the interest that people continue to show in conflict resolution training.

Seldom do people embroiled in major conflict think that what they need are professional neutrals or dispute system designers. While engaging includes conflict resolution since that is an appropriate goal and focus at the right point in the trajectory of conflict, it does not assume that to be the goal.
