We will take a look at the images and representations of Alexandria in film and popular culture in contrast with what the city now is, following its rapid demographic and cultural change that has been taking place for decades, slowly approaching the true owners of the city. How do cultural policy and state financial support to the studios impact and shape the production of art, and the lives and existence of the artist, too?

Theywereartists,musicians,actors,fashiondesigners. He said that art must reach the man in the street. The fabric and its surface are the interiority of the movement itself, which produces an immersive environment not only to look at, but one which the audience walking in the space can feel or inhabit through their moving bodies. There I feel that nothing can befall me in life, which nature cannot repair.
